An adoptive family will require experience, knowledge, and practical application of creative parenting techniques. Cody will need a family that has a great deal of patience and willingness to be involved with his education and development in order to meet his special needs.

Cody is a high energy, strong-willed child and does not give in easily. He can become frustrated and upset and have loud tantrums. Cody likes to climb and jump off things which has lead to hurting himself. He is protective of his toys and worried that other children may take them or play with them. Cody's behaviors have improved although he needs to be supervised, especially around other children.
